

~Evolution from Hollywood~

This is a letter I wrote to the local Newspapers in Maple Ridge about some of the schools showing the kids the movie: "Inherit the Wind", which re-enacts the famous "Scopes" Trial of the 1920's.

I see that the public 'deaducation' system looks to Gollywood in order to keep our children's minds trapped within its belief in Darwinian origins. "Inherit the Wind" was an attempt to show folks how 'bigoted and narrow-minded' creationists are compared with the 'enlightened and tolerant' evolutionists.

What transpired (through the mesmerism of Lollywood) was a replacement of ideas introduced into the public. Through passion and emotion (and very good acting), the movie presents us with the scenario of a Christian minister trying desperately to hold on to his "old fashioned, irrelevant" beliefs while falling to the sword of the new reality-Darwinism!

It was enough to make ya weep! In the movie, people in the courtroom looking on, with pitied glances, as the preacher falls from blow after blow from the weaponry pulled out of the evolutionist's bag of tricks. It is, really, a pathetic caricature of the arguments between the theory of evolution and the theory of creation--both still theories, folks!

My constant question is this: "If neither theory has been proven, why are we teaching only ONE side of this issue to our children (mine excepted, of course, as they attend a Christian school and are exposed to BOTH sides of the argument)? Is this not what we want for our kids--CHOICE? Is education not also to teach our kids to think?

If teachers want to really introduce something constructive and educational into the public school system (something that is unlikely to ever happen) then let them teach BOTH creation and evolution and let the kids make up their own minds.

What a novel idea for the public school system--teaching kids to think!!! Instead, they get a silly movie.

There are great debates between creation scientists and evolutionary scientists (usually put on by Churches and Universities) in which, time after time, the creation scientist clobbers the evolutionist. Methinks the public School board doesn't have the meat to present these debates in the schoolroom as it would upset their agenda of brainwashing our children to fit in with the their social humanist mentality!!

David Suzuki once remarked that although he has no idea of how or where or why we came here, he believes and teaches evolution. THAT is exactly the problem! Many of us want to know HOW we came here and what or who started it all. Mr. Suzuki admits he does not have the answer. He speaks for his compatriots as well. They don't have a clue. They are, in many cases, simply groping around in the dark, trying to put the pieces together while rejecting the main part of the puzzle--the creator--God!

Since prayer and God were removed from the public school system, we have seen a downward spiral in attitudes, morals, ethics and respectful behaviour of both students and teachers. One only has to think of Columbine High School and similar happenings to see what has become of our system. NEVER did you hear of things like this in the 40's and 50's. It was unthinkable.

Boy, have we come a long way along the evolutionary ladder, eh?

The 'ad' for this play states that it does away with the Biblical notion of "sticks turning into snakes", etc. Well, does not evolution tell us we have "turned from frogs into princes--fish into philosophers--bits of goo into me and you"??

Hmmmmmmmmmmmm?

Darwin, it is said in the advertisement in this paper, "moved us forward to a hilltop so we could look back and see the way from which we came". In reality, Darwin only moved us into a valley where we can see nothing at all about the big picture because the mountains are blocking the view! Even Darwin recanted of much of what he said while dying. One supposes he is now a creationist!

Evolution, taken to its logical conclusion, will enable us, as humans, to act like all the other animals in being able to kill it's own kind- without judgment or censor- in the same way that a colony of red ants wipes out an entire colony of black ones. We consider such a thing and just tell ourselves: 'It's only evolution at work'!! With that kind of conclusion, one can easily justify what Hitler, Stalin and the like did to those they considered 'unfit'--evolution at work!

If we all came from the same bowl of soup, what's the difference??

Remember, in nature, there is no good and bad--only killing and eating! We, created in the image of God, are the only creature with a moral conscience! We are the only creation that knows right from wrong.

An eminent, albeit controversial, evolutionist himself, Stephen Jay Gould came up with this revealing statement: "...in my view, the moral law itself defies a purely biological explanation."

It sounds as though evolutionists are making monkeys of us all.
